THEN AND NOW

Many of us are probably tiring of the continuous challenge of navigating around the obstacle course we all once knew as Kendall Green.

Take heart, if it had not been for President Theodore Roosevelt, Representative Thetus Sims, and D.C. Commissioner John B. Wight, we would all be waiting at railroad crossings to go across campus and setting our watches according to train arrivals and departures instead of the tower clock.

It was these three men who saved the campus from the B & O Railroad tracks. When President Roosevelt took office, he vigorously endorsed the Wight-Sims plan, which called for consolidating all the railroad terminals under one roof and thus, running the B & O tracks just beyond the western boundary of the campus.

The plan was approved and signed on February 28, 1903 and kept Kendall Green intact.

CONSORTIUM OF UNIVERSITIES MAKES FUNDS AVAILABLE

Approximately $100,000 will be available under Title I of the Higher Education Act of 1965 to D.C. institutions of higher education for community service and continuing education programs for fiscal 1973.

According to the Consortium of Universities, which serves as the designated state agency in D.C.:

"The Fiscal 1973 plan for the District of Columbia requests pilot projects addressed to preventive education in the areas of pollution of the social and physical environment, which will establish innovative theoretical or conceptual approaches, and that have been developed in cooperation with (1) A community organization or neighborhood center and/or department within the D.C. government or an appropriate public agency, or (2) With leaders of several community organizations and neighborhood centers which can be viewed as a leadership development or "training program for trainers" effort.

OREGON POLICE LEARNING SOME BASIC SIGNS

Oregon law enforcement officers have recently received instruction booklets depicting three standard gestures which can be used to facilitate communication between policemen and deaf persons.

Illustrations of a deaf person indicating that he cannot hear and signs a policeman can use to show "OK I understand" and "I must search you" are included. Plans have been developed to expand the program to use possibly 10 or more signs.

The pamphlet was initiated by the Oregon Board of Police Standards in cooperation with the Oregon Registry of Interpreters of the Deaf and the Oregon State School for the Deaf.

A note pad and pencil will be used for more extensive communication and a policeman is to carry cards stating a persons rights in the event of arrest. Interpreters are also available for assistance.
