TV SERIES TO BE INTERPRETED

"Christopher Closeup," a weekly public affairs talk show, will introduce an on-camera interpreter for deaf viewers this fall and winter.

Last winter, the program's producers contacted our Public Service Programs to explore the idea of adding an interpreter. Public Services provided information and encouragement but suggested that they work with the Deafness Research and Training Center at New York University since the program is based in New York City.

Carol Tipton, the wife of a Gallaudet alumnus and staff member of the Deafness Research and Training Center, will interpret for the program's co-hosts and guests.

The half-hour weekly series of ten programs, which discusses a wide variety of current topics, will be broadcast in 49 cities throughout the country. The series will be shown in the Washington area over WTTG, Channel 5, beginning September 23.

Guests will include Nanette Fabray, CBS-TV correspondent Charles Kuralt, and Harrison Salisbury of the N.Y. Times. Old age, alcoholism, children's TV shows, and the life of George Washington will be among the topics to be discussed.

A GALLAUDET FIRST

The Department of Safety and Security has hired its first female security officer, Carolyn Robinson. Carolyn, who has a degree from Howard University in sociology, will be commissioned a special officer by the Metropolitan Police Department.

We believe that she is the first woman in the area to serve on a campus security force.
