G.W. STUDENTS AVAILABLE FOR RESEARCH

The Department of Sociology at the George Washington University in coordination with other academic departments at the University has a program which engages students and faculty in conducting research, surveys and program evaluation and planning for community organizations which might not be able to conduct these activities, while at the same time providing educational research opportunities for their students.

Proposals will be evaluated in terms of the students' and faculty's research interest and competence and the requests must suggest a project broad enough in scope and sufficiently challenging to involve the total time and capacities of 10-12 students and one-third faculty time for a semester.

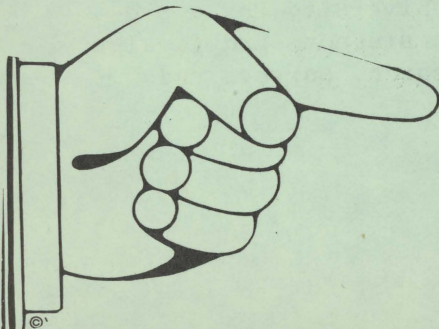

Requests must be submitted no later than March 1. For further information and proposal applications contact Dr. Joseph Tropea at 676-6897.
